OS PINOS

¿Qué din os rumorosos na costa verdecente
ao raio transparente
do prácido luar?
¿Qué din as altas copas de escuro arume arpado co seu ben compasado monótono fungar?

Do teu verdor cinguido
e de benignos astros confín dos verdes castros
e valeroso chan,
non des a esquecemento
dainxuria o rudo encono;
desperta do teu sono fogar de Breogán.

Os bos e xenerosos
a nosa voz entenden
e con arroubo atenden
o noso ronco son,
mais só os iñorantes
e féridos e duros, imbéciles e escuros
non nos entenden, non.

Os tempos son chegados dos bardos das edades que as vosas vaguedades cumprido fin terán;
pois, donde quer, xigante a nosa voz pregoa
a redenzón da boa nazón de Breogán.

EDUARDO PONDAL

THE PINES

What do the murmuring pines say there by the greening coast in the transparent gleaming of the placid moonlight?
What do the lofty crests of dark, serrate needles say speaking with their cadence in monotonous whispers?

Girded by your greenery and by your gentle stars oh you, land of verdant hillforts and a courageous earth
you must never forget the hard anger of insults awaken from your slumber oh hearth of Breogán.

The good and the generous they understand our words and they listen, entranced, to our cavernous sound.
Because only the ignorant the cruel ones and the rude the imbecile and the foolish don't understand us, they don't.

The time has finally come for the bards of all ages for your doubt and uncertainty will soon come to an end because everywhere our great voice is shouting the proclamation of redemption for the good nation of Breogán.

ROSALÍA DE CASTRO

A XUSTICIA POLA MAN

Aqués que tén fama d' honrados na vila roubáronme tanta brancura qu' eu tiña; botáronme estrume nas galas dun día, a roupa de cote puñéronma en tiras.
Nin pedra deixaron en dond' eu vivira;
sin lar, sin abrigo, morei nas curtiñas;
ó raso cas lebres dormín nas campías;
meus fillos... ¡meus anxos!... que tant' eu quería, ¡morreron, morreron ca fame que tiñan!
Quedei deshonrada, mucháronm' a vida, fixéronm' un leito de toxos e silvas;
i en tanto, os raposos de sangre maldita, tranquilos nun leito de rosas dormían.

* * *

— Salvademe joub, xueces!, berrei... ¡Tolería!
De min se mofaron, vendeuem' a xusticia.
— Bon Dios, axudaime, berrei, berrei inda... tan alto qu' estaba, bon Dios non m' oíra.
Estonces, cal loba doente ou ferida, dun salto con rabia pillei a fouciña, rondei pasenijo... (ne' as herbas sentían) i a lúa escondíase, i a fera dormía cos seus compañoiros en cama mullida.

Mireinos con calma, i as mans estendidas, dun golpe ¡dun soio! deixeinos sin vida.
I ó lado, contenta, senteime das vítimas, tranquila, esperando pola alba do día.

I estonces... estonces cumpreuse a xusticia:
eu, neles; i as leises, na man qu' os ferira.

ROSALÍA DE CASTRO

JUSTICE BY MY OWN HAND

Those who are thought to be honorable in this town stole from me all the purity I had;
they spread manure then on my best gown, they tore up my old clothes, threw them on the ground.
They left nary a stone standing where I called home;
with no hearth, no coat, I lived in sheds in the cold;
I slept beside the hares in fields not my own;
my children... my angels!... the ones I loved so,
They died, they died, their hunger a great hole!
I was left with no honor, my life a wilted rose, they made me a bed of brambles and thorns;
and meanwhile those foxes with their evil blood, slept peacefully in their beds of roses.

* * *

- Save me, oh judges, I roared... I cannot go on!
They laughed at me, by justice I'd been sold
- Dear God, help me, I roared, I roared all the more... but he was so high up, dear God didn't know.
Then, like a she wolf who's ill or wounded, with a leap I grabbed the scythe, fury made me bold, I circled around slowly... (even the grass didn't know) and the moon hid, and the beast was snoring with his friends in a bed of comfort.

I looked at them calmly, hands thrust forward and with a single blow - just one! - their lives were my own.
And then happy, I sat down by their corpses, calm and waiting for the day to be born.

And then... then justice was bestowed:
I, upon them; and the law, on the hand that drove it home.

MANOEL-ANTONIO

OS CÓBADOS NO BARANDAL

Atopamos esta madrugada n-a gayola d'o Mar
unha illa perdida

Armaremos de novo a gayola Vai a sair o Sol
improvisado e dosourentado

Xa temos tantas estrelas e tantas luas sumisas que non caben n-o barco nin n-a noite

Xuntaremos paxaros sin xeografía pra xogar c'as distanzas d'as suas áas amplexadoras

E os adeuses d'as nubes mudos e irremediabes

E armaremos unha rede de ronseles pra recobrar as saudades c'o seu viaxe feito pol-os oucéanos d'o noso corazón.

ELBOWS RESTING ON THE RAILING

Today at dawn we found an island that had been lost!¹ in the cage of the Sea!

We will assemble the cage again
The Sun is coming out improvised and disoriented

We have so stars now and so many submissive moons that don't fit in the ship nor in the night

We'll gather birds with no geography so we can play with the span of their embracing wings

And the farewells from the clouds silent and irreparable

And we'll create a net of wakes to recover the wistfulness with the voyage they made through the oceans of our hearts.

¹ The open sea is an island of water surrounded everywhere by sky.

MANOEL-ANTONIO

SÓS

Fomos ficando sós
o Mar o barco e mais nós.

Roubaron-nos o Sol
O paquebote esmaltado que cosía con liñas de fume áxiles cadros sin marco

Roubaron-nos o vento Aquel veleiro que se evadeu pol-a corda floxa d' o horizonte

Este oucéano desatracóu d'as costas e os ventos d' a Roseta ourentaron-se ao esquenzo
As nosas soedades
veñen de lonxe
como as horas d' o reloxe Pero tamén sabemos a maniobra d' os navíos que fondean a sotavento d' unha singladura N-o cuadrante estantío d'as estrelas ficou parada esta hora: O cadavre d'o Mar
fixo d'o barco un cadaleito

Fume de pipa Saudade
Noite Silenco Frío
E ficamos nós sós
Sin o Mar e sin o barco nós.

ALONE

We ended up alone
the Sea the ship and us

They stole our Sun
The lacquered packet-boat that sewed unframed paintings with lines of smoke

They stole our wind
That sailboat that disappeared along the limp rope of the horizon

This ocean cast off from the coasts and the winds of the compass Rose headed toward oblivion

Our loneliness
comes from far away
like the hours of the clock

But we also know the movement of the ships that anchor leeward of a route

In the still quadrant of the stars this hour stood still:

The cadaver of the Sea
turned the ship into a coffin

Smoke from a pipe Nostalgia Night Silence Cold
And we end up all alone
Without the Sea and without the ship just us.

LUZ POZO GARZA

HAI UNHA VOZ

Hai unha voz
no tempo de Galicia Hai unha voz sen verbas que todos escoitamos no silencio Lembrando nomes pra que naza o millo Chámase morte ou mágoa
Xuramento de anguria
Soidade
Pensamento de pedra Chámase berro e fonte
e desarrimo
Chámase olvido
E chámase arelanza
Ou vida ou liberdade ou compaña dos nosos Chámase soño ou morte lar
saudade
Chámase choiva que lourea os froitos
Hai unha voz
Chámase Rosalía
Sete letras de laio
Saudade
dunha fala ferida
Esperanza dun mundo que inda fica nun berro de liberdade
Hai unha voz
A súa
Benzoada

Luz Pozo Garza

THERE IS A VOICE

There is a voice
in the time of Galicia There's a voice without words that we all hear in the silence Remembering names so the corn will grow
It's called death or pain
A vow of anguish
Loneliness
Thought made of stone
It's called shout and fountain and abandonment
It's called oblivion
And it's called desire
Or life and liberty or company of loved ones It's called dream or death hearth
nostalgia
It's called rain that brightens the fruit
There's a word
It's called Rosalía
Seven letters of mourning Longing
for a wounded tongue
Hope for a world
that still cries out
for freedom
There's a word
Hers
Blessed

XOHANA TORRES

ROSALÍA

Ti es pra min a barquiña que lembra toda presencia de madeiras naufragas que vive, infinda, unha traxedia líquida de peiraos sen panos e sen peixes.

Sedenta coma un mar
e no teu mar, afogada.

Ti es pra min un pobo pequenijo de vieiros sen cume, sen riadas, mergullando no seo case morto unha virxe canción, inimitable

Sedenta coma un mar
e no teu mar, afogada.

Ti es pra min unha callada piña de moitas primaveras agardadas onde xogaron anxos
onde vibraron ás sen movelas.

Sedenta coma un mar
e no teu mar, afogada.

Ti es pra min a historia da meniña que ía soñando praias
ata que deu marea a un ben triste mañá.

Sedenta coma un mar
e no teu mar, afogada.

Ti es pra min o lombo dunha sombra onde todo resulta preguntado e o paso das persoas faise lene...

Sedenta coma un mar
e no teu mar, afogada.

¡Ti es pra min a terra dunha tumba, cumpridamente limpa de pisadas!...

XOHANA TORRES

ROSALÍA

For me you're the little boat that remembers every piece of shipwrecked wood that lives, unending, a liquid tragedy of piers without nets and without fish

Thirsty as a sea
and in your sea, drowned.

For me you're a small nation of paths without crests, without floods, plunging into a nearly dead breast an innocent song, one of a kind

Thirsty as a sea
and in your sea, drowned.

For me you are a ripe pine cone of many long-awaited springs where angels once played where wings vibrated without moving.

Thirsty as a sea
and in your sea, drowned.

For me you are the story of the girl who would dream of beaches until one very sad morning the tide came in.

Thirsty as a sea
and in your sea, drowned.

For me you are the back of a shadow
Where everything has questions
And people's steps are gentle...

Thirsty as a sea
and in your sea, drowned

For me you're the earth of a tomb, perfectly free of footsteps!...

XOHANA TORRES

PENÉLOPE

DECLARA o oráculo:

“QUE á banda do solpor é mar de mortos, incerta, última luz, non terás medo.
QUE ramos de loureiro erguen rapazas.
QUE cor malva se decide o acio.
QUE acades disas patrias a vindima.
QUE amaine o vento, beberás o viño.
QUE sereas sen voz a vela embaten.
QUE un sumario de xerfa polos cons.”

Así falou Penélope:

“Existe a maxia e pode ser de todos.
¿A que tanto novelo e tanta historia?

EU TAMÉN NAVEGAR.”

XOHANA TORRES

PENELOPE

The oracle declares:

Alongside the sunset, the sea of the dead, uncertain, final light, you can't be afraid.
Girls wave laurel branches.
The grape cluster selects mauve.
You should harvest those nations.
Let the wind die down and drink the wine.
Mermaids without voices attack the sail.
There's a fringe of seafoam on the rocks."

Thus spoke Penelope:

"Magic exists and can belong to us all.
Why so many threads and so many stories?"

ME SAIL TOO.

EN COMPOSTELA PODE UN HOME

En Compostela pode un home
escoller óboe e docísimo cor ao contrapaso, decaer nos tremendoiros (VIBRA, CORAZON GASTADO!)
tenra especie de prantas espirais e añaúca ou seixo de xogar antre os dedos.

Pode pedra luída
alzarte sobre sí coma un guerreiro é proclamado rei de oucas e carballeiras vellas.

En Compostela pode un vento duro estremecer o corazon da Europa campesina que todos temos dentro sen decilo.

En Compostela soan polonesas, nacionalmente, en moitos plenilunios cabo de transparentes ollos, mortos, e un barroco de bronce ergue paxaros de duro marmore e oubear oubelan os consehos nas murallas de San Martiño Pinario.

En Compostela, enfín, compañías de mortos compañeiros comen caldo insumiso na lembranza ilustrada (VOTO POR VÓS: ROSALIA, PONDAL, FARALDO) das cabezas alzadas.

En Compostela está o que perdemos e vai nacendo noutros e esto é o grande milagre (UNHA LAPA LENE, UNHA CANDELEXA!) da conciencia desta patria conservada en pequenos corazóns ardentes con fogo doce que non morre.

En Compostela soterraron a semente chamada Xohan Xesus Gonzalez, porta dun futuro suntuoso e proletario que avanza cara a nós con alboroto e vénme o arreguizo somentes de pensalo e de amalo.

En Compostela estamos moitos xa para sempre derrotados.

XOSÉ LUIS MÉNDEZ FERRÍN

IN COMPOSTELA A MAN CAN

In Compostela a man can choose an oboe and the softest color for poetic justice, sink into the patches of quicksand (BEAT, BATTERED HEART!) tender species of curving plants and the back of the neck or a game piece between his fingers.

Liquid stone can lift you above it like a warrior is proclaimed king of seaweed and old oak groves.

In Compostela a harsh wind can make peasant Europe's heart shudder the one inside us all, but we say nothing.

In Compostela, polonaises play, in this nation, under many full moons beside dead, watery eyes, and a baroque bronze erects birds from hard marble and the pennyworts howl and howl from the walls of San Martiño Pinario.

In Compostela, just saying, groups of dead comrades eat disobedient broth of learned memory (I VOTE FOR YOU: ROSALÍA, PONDAL, FARALDO) of heads held high.

In Compostela this 9th we're losing and is born in others and this is the great miracle (A BRIEF FLAME, A CANDLE!)
of this nation's consciousness preserved in small hearts burning with gentle, undying fire.

In Compostela they buried the seed called Xohan Xesús González, door to a sumptuous proletariat future moving toward us, shouting and I shiver just thinking about it and loving.

In Compostela there are many of us, now defeated forever.

MARICA CAMPO

COMBATE

Canta a fraxilidade deste fío!
Suavidade de seda polos dedos, pericia prega á man que cega tece como se fose ferro a facer reixa para cerrar a cova de onde o lobo teima saír, abrindo fero a boca.

Hai en algures sempre aberta boca de cairos aguzados para o fío quebrar. Desproporción de forza o lobo, fronte á inútil porfía dos meus dedos.
O poema, esta forma, a súa reixa, outra man invisíbel que aquí tece.

A que coñece o mar con algas tece sutís panos de verdes, tapa a boca destoutra, prisioneira tras a reixa, a converter o cuspe en longo fío.
Así como arañeiras entre os dedos para facer que sexa humano o lobo.

Oulea louco, oulea o home, o lobo, escuro no infinito noite tece, esváranlle as estrelas entre os dedos e non lle cabe a luz en toda a boca, escoa polo ceo longo fío de claridade alta, malia a reixa.

Porque sempre perdura forte a reixa malia que molle o día a pel do lobo e deconstrúa o medo fío a fío.
Tal como unha Penélope que tece, a desfacer por un extremo, a boca, e a refacer, polo outro extremo, os dedos.

Virá fatal como un tremor de dedos, tal unha saltasebes pola reixa, un berro inaugural a encher a boca, corazón a medrar, peito de lobo, cal pano das galaxias que alguén tece, intanxíbel a man que move o fío.

Daquela o fío, luz que toca os dedos, palabras tece, salta audaz a reixa, xa non hai lobo: sae o mar da boca.

COMBAT

This thread is so fragile!
Silky softness on my fingers, skill begs the hand that blindly weaves, as if it were iron to make a grating to shut off the cave where the wolf struggles to escape, baring its mouth of steel.

There's always an open mouth somewhere sharp fangs that work to snip the thread. Too strong that wolf, my fingers work to no avail.
The poem, this structure, its grating, another, less visible, hand that weaves here.

One who knows the sea spins with algae subtle green cloth, silencing the speech of another, imprisoned behind the iron, forging a long thread from saliva.
A thread like webs between the fingers that make the wolf into a person.

Howling madly, a man or wolf howls, dark in infinity weaves evening, stars slip through its fingers and light doesn't fit in its mouth, a long thread glowing brightly across the sky, despite the grating.

Because the iron is everlasting
Even though the wolf's fur dampens the day and undoes fear thread by thread.
Like a Penelope weaving, unraveling mouth on one end, remaking fingers on the other.

It will be as fatal as shivering fingers, like a rising vine on the iron grate, an opening yowl swelling in the mouth, growing heart, wolf's breast,
a galactic fabric that someone is weaving, threads moving in the intangible hand.

Then the thread, a glow of fingertips, weaves words; the grating rises up boldly, there is no more wolf: the sea spills from the mouth.

ALBERTO AVEDAÑO

O QUE FAS ÁS CEGAS (ANACO)

O que fas ás cegas

abre o tempo en dúas metades, premes nelas e reconcíliaste coas dúas caras invisibles ás que un día odiaches
e non quixeches ver máis.

Nunca máis diante
e choraches ás cegas lágrimas mudas
saloucos brandos
impos figureiros
lacerándote por dentro: que xa non queres ver máis nunca máis diante aquilo que odiaches.

O que fas ás cegas

permíteche revivir a túa infancia sen riscos, morto en vida,
como en telenovela,
como en xantar familiar con bicos de pastelería e medo.

O que fas ás cegas

provoca que a verdade te observe desde a cova, entre sombras, auscultando o silencio:
un suspiro delata
unha palabra suicida
un verso cala.

(Levantas da cadeira, abandoas o escritorio e tomas notas polo aire escribíndolle a Chantal e debuxando a Freixanes. Os cadrís ceden e o sofá recóllete.)

ALBERTO AVEDAÑO

WHAT YOU DO BLINDLY

What you do blindly

splits time in two,
you press on both halves and come to terms with the two invisible faces you once had hated
and never wanted to see again.

Never facing them again and you cried blindly silent tears
soft sobbing
twisted hiccups
tearing you to pieces inside: you never want to face what you hated again.

What you do blindly

lets you relive your unscarred childhood, dead yet still alive,
like in a soap opera,
like at a family meal with cupcake kisses and fear

What you do blindly

makes truth watch you from the cave, among the shadows, studying the silence:
a sigh reveals
a word committing suicide a line falls silent.

(You get up from the chair, walk away from the desk and take notes in the air writing to Chantal and sketching Freixanes, your back falters and the couch catches you.)

O que fas ás cegas

obrígate a soñar esperto, soñar por exemplo: unha man suxéitate antes de que o garfo se incruste na túa carne e apretas nela sen gratitude e sen medo, con tensión dialéctica e pretendida ausencia (tamén chamado absentismo moral ou amoralidadade presencial). No convocas frases conativas, agardas con paciencia indolora, inodora e insípida a diligencia do abysmo de Pessoa.

O que fas ás cegas

subsiste no fondo de toda expresión con vocación de eternidade, “como un pó indissoluble no fondo do copo de onde se bebeu só agua.” (Pessoa)

O que fas ás cegas

satisface deberes, non temas.

E se te xurde un compromiso ineludible, algo imperativo que debes facer porque é cuestión “de vida ou morte”, o meu consello é que escollas a vida e non vayas.

Que te xulguen en ausencia.

Non vayas.

Quédate ás cegas coa túa paisaxe, coa túa intuición, con todo o que é teu.

O que fas ás cegas

perténceche. Todo o que non debes é teu, o que tes e non ves é teu.

O que fas ás cegas

perténceche como unha paisaxe que os teus ollos non abarcan

O que fas ás cegas

é surrealista por definición.

Vas o supermercado e regresas envurullado en plástico e bicas ás escondidas, ou así parece, e entrégaste, como amante profiláctico, que aloumiña a froita sen encanto.

E a lúa alucina filmada por un dron que te ameaza en picado, que te aterra.

What you do blindly

forces you to daydream, to dream, for example: of a hand holding you before the hook pierces your skin and you grab for it ungratefully and unafraid, with dialectic tension and intended absence (also called moral absenteeism or present amorality). You don't use connotative phrases, you wait with unpainful, unscented and insipid reason for Pessoa's diligência do abysmo.

What you do blindly

is there at the base of all the expressions that try to be eternal, "como um pó indissolúvel, no fundo do copo de onde se bebeu só água." (Pessoa)

What you do blindly

is good for chores, not concepts.

And if you have an unavoidable commitment, something you must do that you have to do because it's a matter "of life or death," my advice to you: choose life and don't leave.

They can judge you in absentia.

Don't go.

Stay (here) blindly, with your landscape with your intuition, with all that is yours.

What you do blindly

belongs to you. Everything you don't owe is yours.
what you have and don't see is yours.

What you do blindly

belongs to you like a landscape your eyes cannot contain

What you do blindly

is pure surrealism.

You go to the supermarket and return wrapped in plastic and you kiss secretly, or so it seems,
and you offer yourself, like a prophylactic lover, caressing the fruit that has no charm.

And the moon hallucinates, filmed by a drone that threatens to dive bomb you, terrifies you.

O que fas ás cegas

disminúe o tempo.

O que fas ás cegas

é o que perdura.

A vida é un verso que acaba antes de empezarse, un delirio lírico como moito.

Nunca unha novela. Toda narración é ilusoria. As personaxes sombras. As peripecias distraccións. Nada esencial pasa ou nada pasa que sexa esencia. Ti es máis. Es nada. Non unha historia. Un verso e o seu precipicio. Iso é a vida. Ti es esa caída e o seu garfo. O demais é arrogancia. Que pretendes coas túas historias?

Ver?

Só

O que fas ás cegas

ilumina.

What you do blindly

diminishes time.

What you do blindly

is what lasts forever.

Life is a verse that ends before it begins, at best a lyrical delirium. Never a novel. All narrations are deceptive. Characters are shadows. Adventures distractions. Nothing really important happens or nothing happens that is real. You are more. You are nothing. Not a story. A verse and its precipice. That's life. You're that fall and its hook. Everything else is arrogance. What are you trying to do with the stories you tell?

See?

Only

What you do blindly

can illuminate.

EMMA PEDREIRA

A CIDADE SEN PEL

I

Decidimos que sería aquí - e así- o noso ritual por ese valor tan indestrutible que teñen a sombra e as pedras e porque aquí non somos nada para ninguén; os únicos son os nomes tallados a cicel por quen xa non existe.
Aquí sería todo algo sacrificial, os nosos corpos fríos unha alta copa de peles construída baixo a prata da lúa, dúas bocas novas feitas alberca na que desabar o escuro torrente da cidade.
Arremetidas badaladas, quero que me marques con trece e ampliarlle as gadoupas á noite pero antes
terás que cazarme.

II

De Belvís a San Pedro ripando as lousas meto poemas táctiles de carriza arrempuxando cos dedos entre as fendas de cada grau da pedra.
Igual o meu dedo entre o teu peito e o sobrazo procura acenderche a luz, esa que non brilla pero queima, como o roce áspero e rápido da fuxida contra o xisto prende un lume pequeno.
Vén buscarme.

III

Ás toas, na Algalia catas ese perfume de séculos.
Mestrouse cos restos e a pesar de non facer relevo pegada aos muros poderías saberme, como o aroma impregnado no vello.
Ás cegas, se revisas coas mans o cromado das contornas da Santa Salomé poderás diferenciar o ardido do que queima e prender un facho co que se desatou do meu vestido en arrebol.
Xa non estou aí, sábelo polo frío e un casto silencio no que che estrondan os poros e eu piso unha a unha as tampas brancas das mortiñas almas de Bonaval.
Vanse trenqueleando os pasos cada tres lousas por darche un trazado por se non sabes que das doce portas da cidade antiga só pola miña non darás saído se entras.

EMMA PEDREIRA

THE CITY WITHOUT SKIN

I

We decided our ritual would take place here - and like this - drawn by the indestructible nature of shadow and stones and because here we mean nothing to anyone; the only thing the names chiseled by one no longer here.

Everything here would be an act of sacrifice, our cold bodies a tall glass of skin created beneath a silvered moon, two young mouths turned into a pool to quiet the city's dark torrent.
Thrusting toll of bell, strike thirteen for me and open your talons to the evening but first
you must catch me.

II

From Belvís to San Pedro skipping over stones I set out soft, mossy poems pushing my fingers between the cracks of every step of stone.

Like my finger between your chest and armpit tries to turn on your light, the one that doesn't shine yet burns, like the quick, rough brush of flint over schist lights a tiny flame.
Come find me.

Drifting along Agalia Street you sense the perfume of centuries.
It mingled with the remains and despite not stopping beside the walls you could taste me, like the scent that impregnates old things.
If you run your hands blindly over the painted surface of Saint Salomé you can distinguish what has burned from what is burning and light a torch with what flew from my skirt as I whirled.
I am no longer there, you can tell by the cold and the chaste silence where your pores thunder and one by one I walk over the white slabs of the dead souls of Bonaval.
Feet hopping on every three slabs to forge a path in case you don't know that of the twelve gates to the old city you'll never leave by mine if you enter.

IV

En Mazarelos axeonllo a beber do lique áspero como se fose unha vaca negra.
Coa grupa baixa as santas compañas aproveitan para deixarme na caluga o sinal da cruz.
Pecadora. Bruxa. Non te arrepintes?
No alto do meu cu brilla toda unha lúa chea e fago a figa e un redondel coa lingua e pasan os espíritos cara a capela das Ánimas. Ningunha arde como eu ardo.
Ningunha deixa tras de si este rastro de pedra en po
para que me recompoñas.

Tránsito dos gramáticos. O que me abroia na lingua é un zunido de balea, non palabras que chamen por ti. Nesa ruela que non ten nome gárdanse pasos ou latexa algo de látego e besta que restala. Algo que vai vindo. Tremen as pozas.
Mesmo a que me desauga no de dentro.

VI

Se asomas o rosto á Fonte de Cervantes podes verlle os pés e tamén a curvatura exacta na que lavo os brazos e o peito e vanme aparecendo as escamas de mica por fóra da boca, o frío e o teu perfil vibrátil na superficie da auga.
No pequeno recanto de Sampaio, ese que fai torcedura triangular e escura, a túa man no meu cóbado.
Na séptima escaleira da Quintana a zurda no meu van.
En Platerías a auga fixo percorridos insólitos cos catro cabalos, o teu e o meu colo, o sorriso de Daniel ficou outro.
Pola Porta do Paraíso percutimos nove ondas para entrar.

Agora levas nos dedos o po dos canteiros, ese mesmo sangue de quen abriu de primeiras a pedra.
E eu, cruzada polo sinal das miñas dobras, na boca, toda a túa cidade sen pel.

In Mazarelos I kneel to drink from the rough lichens as if I were a black cow.
Haunches lowered, the santas compaías decide to make the sign of the cross on my neck.
Sinner. Witch. Won't you repent?
At the top of my back end a true full moon glows and I make a figa and a circle with my tongue and the souls head toward the Capela das Áimas. None burns like I burn.
None has this trail of powdery stone trailing behind
so you can put me together again.

Tránsito dos gramáticos. The song of a whale shivers on my tongue, it's not words calling to you. That alley without a name holds steps or the crack of a whip and creaking beast. Something is coming. Puddles tremble.
Even the one draining from inside me.

VI

If you face the Fonte de Cervantes you can see his feet and the exact curve where I wash my arms and breast and scales of mica start to appear around my mouth, the cold and your silhouette shimmering on the water's surface.
In the intimate angle by Sampaio, the one that twists in a dark triangle, your hand on my elbow.
On the seventh step of the Quintana your left hand on my waist.
In Platerías water ran strangely over the four horses, your lap and mine, Daniel's smile changed.
At the Porta do Paraíso, we pass through nine waves and enter.

Now your fingers are covered with stonemasons' dust, that same blood of the one who first split the stone open.
And I, marked by the sign of my crevices, on my mouth, your whole city without skin.

LUISA VILLALTA

Non abonda a palabra recitada para fechar o libro da memoria, no fundo sempre hai algo que se ignora como lido só na páxina selada.

A palabra non é escrita, é soñada entre o soño do sonido, incolora entre as cores do sentido, acesória como a ausencia imprescindíbel e a nada.

Procurando ese rosto que se corta no vacío producido entre os versos, ascendín pola escada até unha porta dunha estância onde resoan, imensos, os ecos da palabra, que está morta, na orfa luz en que van boiar dispersos.

Ser só ser, ser corpo unidade simple e infinita que limita a densidade do vacío.

Sentir só a vida
que fusiona o siléncio co silêncio dando así o seu pulso al infinito.

LUISA VILLALTA

The spoken word isn't enough to close the book of memory, in the end something always goes unnoticed as if read on a page that is sealed.

A word isn't a written thing, it's dreamed inside the dream of sound, colorless among the colors of meaning, an accessory like indispensable absence and nothingness.

Looking for that face that is cut out of the space created between verse and verse I ascended the stairs to a door to a room where immense echoes of the word, which is dead, are vibrating,

in the orphan light where they will float and flitter.

Be only being, be body simple and infinite unit that outlines the density of emptiness.

Feel only the life
that fuses silence with silence offering its heartbeat to infinity.

E o meio do camiño será un verso como todos os camiños que comezan e proseguen. Porque un verso non é mais que o que se quebra e continua,
que se escapa
e fica e segue
e articula o ritmo escuro do sentido e anda só, e pára, e anoitece despeñando-se na luz para a seguinte páxina e infinitas a seguir, río en herdanza, libro a libro, como un século a outro século.

A páxina que nunca será escrita está ante min, detrás e se dilata como a aurora ilimitada da lembranza:
no oco da palabra un eco aniña.

Pensar é escuro
como un muro de sombra imerecida:
do outro lado o sol, sempre ao outro lado, lonxe, infinitamente lonxe desta xanela á que rebota estremecida a confusión que por min padece o ar, e as auséncias que proxecto como sombras dalgun min que eu non decido.

Pensar, pensar como en lexión de criaturas espantosas que arrebatan as explicacións mais simples da loucura.
E é así, porque a razón é tráxica, como tráxico é calquer fin último, calquer destino ao que se aboca a vida.

And the path to travel will be a verse like all the paths that begin and keep going. Because a verse is nothing more than what breaks and continues on that runs and hides
and is there and continues and articulates the dark rhythm of meaning and moves about alone, and stops, and ends the day falling headlong into the light for the next page and endless ones that follow, an inherited river, book by book, like century after century.

The page that will never be written is before me, behind me, spreading out like the endless dawn of memory:
in the empty word an echo is tucked in.

Thinking is a dark thing like a wall with shade it doesn't deserve:
on the other side the sun, always on the other side, distant, infinitely distant from this window where shivering uncertainty of the air that I've caused is beating, and the absences I project like shadows of some self I haven't identified.

Thinking, thinking like a legion of frightful creatures that wrench the simplest explanations from madness.
And it's like that because reason is tragic,
like every final ending is tragic,
no matter which direction life takes.

E ficaremos sós
mar e silêncio.

Cando a noite me veña desvendar con amor prometido e demorado estes ollos que ollaron tanto nada, as follas que caíron ao meu pé serán pisadas.

E a auséncia cumprirá o seu oráculo cando a noite sexa o fundo, cando o mesmo mar a noite, e o silêncio
diga a última palabra.

And we will be alone
sea and silence.

When night comes to remove my blindfold with a promised and slow-moving love, from these eyes that saw so much nothing, the leaves that fell at my feet will be crushed.

And absence will complete its oracle when night is background, when the sea itself is night,
and silence
pronounces the final word.
